The party, which last year saw the likes of Michael Jackson and Queen present a collection of fan-made music videos, will again be curated by DJ Nelson. The band are back-peddalling on an earlier appearance to play on Friday evening, after being booked by Casa Madruga weeks after their scheduled appearance.

“We were supposed to play this weekend, and we were excited about it. We would have been very happy playing to 20 people,” said frontman Liam Howlett. “But the bigger they are, the harder they fall. We’ve had to make these big decisions to be able to do these big festivals, and we don’t want to take any risks.” Howlett said The Prodigy are in no rush to play at the Madstock after their “hard push” the first week of the festival. “It’s definitely going to be a mad time, and we want to make sure we can play the songs how we mean to play them,” he said. “We’re going to have a couple of special guests, and we’re going to give them a massive ovation.” Casa Madrugá said it was “very sad” to have had to cancel the Prodigy’s appearance, but said they were “thrilled” to have secured the return of DJ Nelson to Madstock this year. He curated the Madstock party at the weekend, and later hosted the grand final of this year’s Big Day Out at the nearby AAMI Park. The decision to focus on returning acts was made after disappointing ticket sales during the first week of the festival.
