Q: How to sync Core Data objects between two apps I have two apps, one of them is an iOS app written in Objective-C, and the second one is a Cocoa Touch Framework written in Objective-C. The apps use Core Data as their data persistence mechanism. My objective is to synchronize their data, and allow the data to be synced over iCloud. My first thought was to write an iCloud-enabled class that maintains the Core Data SQLite database in the cloud. This class can then be used to synchronize and merge the database state of the two apps (each app has its own SQLite copy). I imagine doing this could be very complex, though, and I'm unsure whether this is the best way to go about it. I could also use an existing data synchronization framework, such as SyncMe. I've done work with Core Data in the past, but not at this level of depth. Is this project feasible, or would my time be better spent doing something else? Are there any good tutorials to walk me through the issues I'm most likely to encounter? Thanks!

A: For that case, you will need to write a custom syncing mechanism, which is indeed complex if not technically very challenging, but you may also have a look to this post: iCloud NSFetchedResultsController Agricultural machinery is a very large industry, with some estimates placing its total value in the region of US$3 billion in Australia. Figures from the Australian Bureau of Agricultural and Resource Economics and Sciences (ABARES) show that in the 12 months to April 2012, there were 543,000 tonnes of agricultural machinery exported from Australia. According to Deutsche Bank, the value of total agricultural machinery imports by Australia are $6.8 billion. Some of the machinery can be classed as construction equipment, such as earthmovers, graders, skid steer loaders and tractors. Chevrolet pressed into service Major agricultural equipment brands include Case IH and International Harvester. The Australian operation of International Harvester Australia is US$2.7 billion and Case IH US$2.8 billion. They are both owned by CGE Capital, a subsidiary of US-based General Electric Company. CGE Capital, which has a large business in engines and agricultural equipment, has recently put a business case to CBA, explaining how Successful management of tardive dyskinesia with risperidone. We describe a 51-year-old African-American man with tardive dyskinesia (TD) who was successfully treated with risperidone. This patient had been on 400-800 mg of benzodiazepines for the past six years for treatment of alcohol dependence and for treatment of low back pain. He had no family history of tardive dyskinesia, however, the patient reported his mother having dyskinesia that responded to haloperidol. Risperidone 1 mg at bedtime was initiated and the dose was titrated up to 2 mg at bedtime and 5 mg twice a day. Risperidone was well tolerated and produced a notable clinical improvement. Risperidone does not appear to increase the risk of TD in tardive dyskinesia sufferers as compared to haloperidol. By an overwhelming majority, the House on Tuesday voted to cut off funding to the Trump administration's family separation policy that has been the focus of a public uproar over its recent indefinite and indefinite detention of migrants. The 224-201 vote, in a mostly party-line vote, breaks an eight-day-old GOP-led Senate deadlock on the issue, which has been roundly condemned by Democrats and immigration advocacy groups as well as in a multi-state lawsuit involving the American Civil Liberties Union. The House measure, which now awaits President Trump's expected signature, would deprive the Department of Homeland Security of $1.6 billion it had requested to fund its efforts to stop the recent wave of families from coming to the U.S.-Mexico border and detaining their children. The vote came as the House debated a revised version of the Republican spending bill that, in addition to the family separation money, would reinstate border walls, shift $5.7 billion to the Pentagon's war budget and cut off various federal research funding, including for neuroscience, cancer and Alzheimer's. The Senate is expected to take up its own version of the bipartisan bill on Thursday. "Some members of Congress want to prevent the suffering of innocent children, but others are more interested in public relations stunts and harming families for political gain," Mr. Trump said in a statement Wednesday evening. "No matter your party, Congress should always stand up for the American people and the American way of life
